Navigating the Future Course of Case Management has implications for the role of care coordination regardless of the setting in which you practice. In the six years of transformation since the Affordable Care Act legislation, long overdue emphasis on care coordination has occurred. More attention is focused on improving patient transitions from one care setting to another, reducing avoidable hospital readmissions, improving communities and focusing on greater patient and family engagement with the care team. We also have encountered many issues that get care coordination “off course.” These challenges include silos in providing care, electronic record variability and lack of connectivity, lack of communication across levels of care, increasing numbers of individuals providing “case management” services, and inconsistencies in carrying out the case management model of care. Policy and regulations continue to impact healthcare and the role of care coordination for case managers.

How will case managers navigate the future to assure favorable outcomes for patients transitioning from one clinical environment to another or to the home? How are the standards of case management practice carried out for individuals with the title of case manager? What is in store for the future for case management professionals knowing the Center for Medicare and Medicaid requirements for value and outcome based payments? How will you navigate the future of case management and “stay on course”?

At the 2016 Case Management Conference healthcare professionals will learn strategies to guide the future course of case management from national, regional, and local experts. Leading experts will present current evidence based findings and practice strategies to manage chronic conditions in older adults. Presentations will focus attention on building capacity for emotional resilience useful personally and professionally. Ethical issues in case management will be explored with specific strategies to reduce fragmentation of care that result when family values and beliefs conflict with professional ethics and evidence based care. Strategies to improve medication adherence in patients with both behavioral and physical health needs will be addressed. Participants will engage in strategies for care coordination to address the epidemic of opiate overdose in our communities.

Join colleagues at the 2016 Case Management Conference in this changing environment and learn practical strategies from nationally recognized experts and providers to care for yourself and those you serve.

Program Objectives
Upon completion of this conference, participants will be able to:

• Describe strategies for professionals to stay on course that benefit the future of case management.
• Implement strategies for older adults with chronic health conditions that will optimize care and quality of life.
• Explore ways to build capacity for emotional resilience both personally and professionally.
• Identify how to professionally address case management dilemmas that arise when families’ personal values and beliefs conflict with professional ethics and evidence based care.
• Describe several steps in the application of strength-based strategies and motivational interventions to positively affect medication adherence in patients with dual diagnoses.
• Explore care coordination strategies useful with patients and families in collaboration with the healthcare team and community agencies to improve the opiate overdose and abuse situation in our midst.

Who Should Attend
This conference is designed for registered nurses, social workers, case managers, and other professionals who work in case management across healthcare settings.

Why Attend
The conference brings nationally recognized leaders in case management to Michigan. You can benefit from collective knowledge, experience, and contacts. In addition, learning takes place in smaller sessions around specific areas of case management.
